

Jody Johnson

Tom Raggio

Kevin Fuller

Carla Calabrese

Dallas Alliance of Collaborative Professionals

This dynamic group of collaborative family lawyers brings decades of education, experience, and expertise to resolve family disputes privately, with respect and dignity, and without litigation. They are all members of the Dallas Alliance of Collaborative Professionals.

It is a fact of life that many marriages end in divorce. Just because divorce is common doesn't mean it has to devastate everyone involved. More divorcing couples are discovering that the court system is often times not the best way to resolve painful and private issues involving their family. Many have turned to a process that focuses on their interests, promotes co-parenting, and puts decision-making back in their hands – collaborative law.

Recognizing that the financial and emotional aspects of a divorce are just as important as the legal aspects, these lawyers

Jesse Hornbuckle

What Do These 10 Best Family Lawyers Have in Common? ...Their Commitment to Collaborative Family Law developed a model that brings neutral financial and mental health professionals into the process. These neutral professionals assist with financial issues and enhance communication, adding value to the process.

After seven years of successful collaborative experiences, the members of the Dallas Alliance of Collaborative Professionals are convinced that for discerning clients, collaborative divorce is the wave of the future.

To learn more about collaborative law and the Dallas Alliance of Collaborative Professionals, visit www.dallascollaborativelaw.com.

A group of Independent, Unaffiliated Family Law Lawyers, Mental Health Professionals, and Financial Professionals